PILLARS

For those attending the spring 2011 picnic, you may have noticed past issues of PILLARS on the tables and wondered how to be included on the mailing list. PILLARS, a publication of the McNeese Foundation, is distributed to donors who have contributed $100 or more in the past three years. It features stories about students receiving scholarships, faculty awarded professorships, donors establishing funds, and other articles of interest about McNeese. For further information, contact Marianne White, editor, at 337.562.4107 or mariannewhite@mcneese.edu.

WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

Mary and Charles Zebley

After a teaching career that began in 1960, Charles Zebley is enjoying his well-deserved retirement. His tenure at McNeese State University began in 1967 as an instructor of physical science and physics lab courses. As if teaching college science wasn't enough, Charles also taught at St. Louis Catholic High School during his lunch hour, oftentimes eating his sandwich in the car on the way.

His passion for education led him to teach advanced math, calculus and physics full-time at St. Louis in 1996, although he continued teaching a technology physics night course at McNeese for nine years. During his McNeese career, Charles was promoted to associate professor and taught beginning astronomy and a variety of physics classes.

Over time Charles slowly reduced his teaching load, and officially retired from St. Louis Catholic High School in May 2011. He still teaches ACT preparatory classes at St. Louis in the fall and spring and was inducted into the St. Louis Hall of Fame in 2009.

Even though he and his wife of two years, Mary, are relatively new to the retirement scene, they are enjoying it. As a retirement gift to himself, Charles and Mary recently traveled to Israel and Italy. Mary, a McComb, MS native, worked for 30 years as a medical insurance billing specialist. The couple has five children and five grandchildren between them.

The Zebleys stay healthy walking around the McNeese campus and take pleasure in gardening and working in their yard. Charles also plays golf with fellow Outriders member, David Frantz. Mary and Charles are active parishioners of Our Lady of Good Counsel Catholic Church and enjoy participating in Outriders activities such as the spring picnic and Christmas party.
